"If there were 10,000 jobs for my district from MX contracts, or even 5,000 jobs," he went on, "I would regard that as positive enough to swing my vote. Unemployment in my district is over 10 percent, and when you have that kind of unemployment rate, 5,000 jobs becomes a very hierative number."

He heard the jobs argument when, as part of a nine-member congressional group, he was invited to Vandenberg Air Force Base in California for Pentagon briefings and a test-firing of the MX on Feb. he has since opposed it.

Ardent backers of the MX such as Representative Samuel S. Stratton of New York state take the House floor to spell out the eco-nomic benefits of the MX program to skeptics. Space Defense Support Sought For May Summit

By Don Cook Los Angeles Times Service
PARIS — The Reagan adminis tration is pressing its major allies for a joint declaration of support for its Strategic Defense Initiative when seven heads of government gather in Bonn for their sunnal economic summit meeting in May, according to European diplomati sources involved in preparations for the meeting.

These sources said the administration would like to have such a declaration from the leaders of Britain, France, West Germany, Italy, Canada and Japan as a means of putting further pressure on the Soviet Union to get down to "meaningful negotiations" at the nuclear arms talks in Geneva.

In return for such support at the summit meeting from May 2 to 4, these sources said, President Ronald Reagan is ready to pledge a policy of research cooperation and access to the high technology in-volved in the multibillion-dollar nissile-defense program.

There is a marked reluctance. particularly on the part of the French, to participate in a joint policy declaration. The Europeans plan to coordinate their own views at a meeting of foreign and defense ministers of the Western European Union in Bonn on April 22 and 23. Its members are France, Britain, West Germany, Italy, the Netherlands, Belgium and Luxembourg.

Reagan Recasting Federal Judiciary Trend Is to Conservative Majority Among U.S. Judges

By Howard Kurtz ington Post Service

WASHINGTON — An impressive list of people think William E. Hellerstein, a senior attorney at New York's Legal Aid Society, should be a federal judge. The Harvard Law School graduate has the blessing of both New York senators, Alfonse M. D'A-mato, a Republican, and Daniel Patrick Moynihan, a Democrat. Twenty-four former federal prosecutors have endorsed him as "an outstandingly able lawyer." He was recommended by a screening panel headed by Leonard Garment, a lawyer for Attorney General Edwin

But it is not likely that Mr. Hel-lerstein will ever sit on the federal bench. Critics have persuaded the Reagan administration that he is too liberal, and administration sources say the proposed nomina-

Congress handed President Ronsingle Reagan this opportunity last year by passing a bankruptry bill creating 85 new district and appeals court judgeships. With nor-mal attrition, this has given Mr. setts at Amherst, said Mr. Reagan's

Mr. Reagan has been using these lifetime appointments to recast the federal judiciary in a more conservative mold, largely by naming white men who share his views on limiting the role of the courts. By the end of his second term, Mr. Reagan likely will have named a majority of the nation's 744 federal trial and appellate judges.

The way in which federal judges are picked is a curious mixture of professionalism and patronage, a backstage contest in which outside forces can sink a qualified nominee almost without warning.
It is a process in which the 55

Republican senators have almost as much sway as the White House. In ideological terms, conservative senators generally are in tune with the administration. "I want to ap-point someone who is at least as concerned about victims' rights as criminals' rights," said Phil Gramm

Moderate Republicans have secured the appointment of a number of less conservative judges, but they are careful not to go too far. "We're not going to be submitting an ultra-liberal who would obviously be anothems to the White House," Mr. D'Amato said.

Sheldon Goldman, a judicial ex-greater concerted effort to ideologically screen the people considered for the judiciary than at any time since Franklin D. Roosevelt's first term," he said. "It is not as important to them to achieve the blessings of the professional organizations on whether they are placing the very best minds on the bench."

Administration officials say they are seeking the brightest and most experienced attorneys who share the president's philosophy of judicial restraint. "We're looking for people who view the role of the courts as interpreting the law, not enacting it," said the White House counsel, Fred F. Fielding. There is an imbalance in some areas of the federal courts, a tendency toward judicial activism. We want to have a balance." The president views this not as patronage, not as a nice reward for und-raising prowess, but as some of the most important decisions he will make," said James M. Spears, acting director of the Justice Department's Office of Legal Policy. Although the lower federal courts receive far less attention than does the Supreme Court, their influence, in some ways, is greater. Together, the district and appeals courts decide more than 300,000

American Is Shot While on Duty In East Germany

HEIDELBERG, West Germany — A Soviet guard shot and killed an unarmed U.S. Army officer at-tached to the U.S. military mission in East Germany, U.S. authorities said here Monday.

The Soviet Embassy in Washington charged that he was taking pho-tographs of military equipment. But the U.S. State Department, apparently rejecting the accusation, said, "There can be no excuse from the Soviet side for this tragic incident." U.S. officials said that the officer was in an unrestricted area and that the shooting was unjusti-

The U.S. Army said that the officer, Major Arthur D. Nicholson, 37, was a Russian linguist and it acknowledged that the East German military mission to which he was assigned was an "intelligencegathering operation."

The United States and the Soviet Union exchanged protests over the incident and an investigation was mider begun.

Major Nicholson, who was posted to the U.S. military mission in Potsdam in February 1982, was killed while on duty Sunday afternoon with another officer, "some distance from Berlin," a diplomatic source said in Bonn. The other officer, who also was unarmed, was unhurt, the source said.

Officers at the Potsdam mission are allowed to travel around East Germany except in restricted areas designated by the Russians, such as Soviet military installations.

The U.S. mission was one of three set up in Potsdam after World War II by the three Western allied powers - the United States, Britain and France — as a liaison with the Soviet forces in East Germany. At the time the missions were established in the late 1940s. East southern province of Dhofar. Omani officials said that Oman has been more concerned with what it sees as the Soviet threat to the Gulf and the Indian Ocean than with the Arab-Israeli conflict. This, Omani officials said, has spurred them to seek foreign mili-tary support, as has Ayatollah Ru-hollah Khomeini's stated intention to export Islamic revolution to other countries in the region.

ing points for the United States at military installations at Masirah Is-land, Sib and Thamarit, and on the Musandam Peninsula near the Strait of Hormuz, Western officials said. The installations, they said, could be critical to any defense of the Gulf.

Because only the strait separates it from Iran, the Musandam Peninsula has provided a useful listening post for monitoring the Iranian revolutionary government, according to Western and Arab intelligence sources interviewed in Washington and the Middle East. The United States used Oman to stage the unsuccessful mission to rescue the American hostages in Iran in 1980. In December, according to Western and Arab officials Washington and the Middle East, the United States had a team of commandos secretly positioned in Oman to monitor the situation during the hijacking of a Kuwaiti plane to Tehran in which two Americans were killed. The Omanis have denied the reports. "Oman has become what we had hoped Egypt might be," a senior U.S. military official said recently. And a State Department official said: "We could never secure the kinds of access in Saudi Arabia that we have negotiated in Oman." The foundation of the U.S.-Omani relationship is an agreement signed in June 1980 - after the fall of the shah of Iran and the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan - that provides the United States with access to Omani installations in exchange for a security commitment from Washington and at least $260 million over five years to modernize Oman's four military bases, according to U.S. officials in Washington and the Middle East. General Watts and other U.S.

and Omani officials said that in the last year Oman has permitted U.S. P-3 anti-submarine reconnaissance planes to operate out of Masirah, U.S. officials said some P-3s have also operated from Sib. The small U.S. Middle East naval fleet and the larger Indian Ocean naval contingent are also resupplied from Masirah, General Watts and other officials said. The agreement provides the battle group with emergency landing rights and the pre-positioning of military equipment, including fuel and spare parts, at U.S.-financed Omani storage facilities at the bases, U.S. officials said. The agreement has started a debate in Oman as well as among State Department and Defense Department officials in Washington. In interviews, senior Omani officials stressed that the installations could not be used against an Iranian threat to the Gulf or its shipping lanes, but only in the face of direct Soviet threat to Oman.

The majority of officials and diplomats who support the U.S.-Omani relationship say Oman is a priceless staging area whose usefulness has already been proved.

Oman, they said, has become what a Western official called as "invaluable" link in the logistical

In Tripoli, a police source said gunmen broke into the home of Gilles Sidney Peyrolles shortly after midnight, singled the French-man out from his roommates and took him away, making him the fourth French national kidnapped in Lebanon since Friday.

In Beirut, Alec Collett, a 63-year-old Briton working for the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestinian Refugees, was kidnapped near Beirut, a spokesman for the agency said in Vienna.

Mr. Collett was identified as a semi-retired former director of a UN information service in Africa. The agency spokesman said that he was taken from his car by "unidentified people" as he and another employee of the agency were ap-proaching the southern Beirut sub-urb of Khalde.

BRUSSELS - The 10 agriculture ministers of the European Community opened a three-day meeting Monday on new farm prices, the first of a series of crucial EC discussions this week.

Industry ministers must decide Tuesday whether to extend state aid to the steel industry beyond Dec. 31, the deadline they set for restoring the industry to health. Foreign Minister Giulio Andreotti of Italy, who chairs the EC Council of Ministers, is to meet Wednesday with Finance Minister Ernani Lopes of Portugal to try to sort out the last problems of Portugal's entry into the EC. Mr. Andreotti is to meet Thursday with Foreign Minister Fernan-do Morán of Spain, also to solve difficulties relating to Spain joining the EC, and later in the day will call the 10 and the two applicants for what is hoped to be the final agreement on the EC enlargement.

If everything goes as planned, EC chiefs of state and government will meet Friday and Saturday for their regular spring summit confer-ence. But if enlargement talks fail Thursday, the conference could be postponed, Prime Minister Bettino Craxi of Italy said.

The farm ministers are not expected to agree this time, a European Commission spokesman said, and will probably have to meet again next week, failing to meet the April I deadline for new farm

Which costs you more?

No small business owner thinks "Can I afford a telephone?"

He can't do without one. But on the grounds of cost, many firms do without a personal computer. Which is strange. Because computing is not only becoming as natural as making phone calls. The cost is now comparable.

How much does each office phone cost you a year? The installation, the rental, the calls?

Buying and operating an IBM personal computer system, with the basic software you need, probably won't cost you any more.

And after your PC is paid off, your phone bill keeps coming.

Now look at what an IBM PC can actually save you.

Take a common headache, inventory control. Our PC XT keeps track of 100,000 different items – more than you'll ever want to stock.

It'll tell you how many of each you've got, what you paid for them, what you're selling them for, and how fast they're moving off the shelf.

Which helps you plan orders, monitor cash flow and boost profitability. Think of tax returns or the VAT.

One of our PCs can save hours of accountants' time, cut the auditor's bill and give you many relaxed evenings at home instead of worried nights at the office.

Talking of the office – how much rent do you pay per square foot? £20?

A filing cabinet takes up six square feet.

That's £120 per year.

The same files on diskettes are less than one tenth of that.

With our new software package, DisplayWrite, your IBM PC turns into a high-powered writing and editing machine, brilliant for new business mailers.

Now you're not only saving money, you're actually making it.

So, the question really isn't how much an IBM Personal Computer costs.

It's how long you can afford to get by without one.

Find out about Authorised IBM Personal Computer Dealers.

Pick up the good old phone now and ring your local IBM office.

Seoul Says 13 in Crew Of Chinese Navy Boat Want to Return Home

By Clyde Haberman New York Times Service

TOKYO - The South Korean government said Monday that 13 surviving crew members of a disabled Chinese torpedo boat now in its custody had expressed a desire to be sent back home.

A government statement implied that the naval vessel and its crew would be returned, but a spokesman said by telephone from Seoul that no decision had been made.

South Korea also said an investigation of a shooting incident aboard the boat, in which six crewmen were killed and two were wounded, had revealed no political Foreign diplomats in Seoul said during the weekend that their information suggested that a mutiny or hostage-taking might have been attempted Friday by would-be defectors while the boat was taking part in maneuvers in the Yellow Sea. But the South Korean announcement Monday said the shooting had been started by two sailors with "grievances" against senior officers.

The statement, issued by the minister of culture and information, Lee Won Hong, said that the two men had stolen automatic rifles from a storage area and had then broken into the boat's bridge, firing upon and killing six senior crew members.

Two other sailors were wounded. but not seriously, and are hospitalized in the western port of Kunsan. Eleven other crew members are in South Korean custody at a Kunsan

According to Mr. Lee, the two armed sailors feared reprisals from the Chinese authorities and steered the boat away from other vessels taking part in the military exercise. The boat eventually ran out of fuel, he said, and drifted into South Korean waters, where a fishing boat spotted it and escorted it to shore.

The Seoul government did not specifically repeat a protest that it made on Saturday in which it asked China to apologize because three of its navy ships had followed the torpedo boat into South Korean waters. But without mentioning the Argentina Seeks U.K. Talks apology, a government spokesman in Seoul said that a decision on returning the boat and its crew York - Argentina accused Britain would be made "after receiving on Monday of obstructing a negotitheir answer on the violation of Korean territorial waters."

On Sunday, the possibility that some Chinese sailors wished to defect prompted officials from the views with crew members.

Two members of the Taiwanese Embassy in Scoul were reported to have tried Sunday to meet crewmen being held at a Kunsan hotel, but were turned away by the South Korean authorities. Taiwan's amhassador to Seoul, Hsueh Yu-chi, cut short a vacation in Taipei, where he said before flying back to South Korea that he hoped to interview the Chinese sailors.

President Ronald Reagan has in-sisted that his Strategic Defense Initiative, the missile defense system popularly known as "star wars," will not be subject to negoti-ated limits. The administration says the Krasnoyarsk radar violates the ABM treaty because it is not located on the periphery of Soviet territory, and because it faces out, loward what would be the trajectory of incoming missiles, rather than up, as for the satellite tracking that is permissible under the treaty.

A recent analysis of this radar by British intelligence experts con-curred that it was a probable violation. But they also observed that treaty language on allowable radars for satellite tracking and monitor-ing of arms treaties did not make it an open and shut case.

The article by Abel Aganbegyan, a member of the Soviet Academy of Sciences and head of an economics institute at Novosibirsk, was published Sunday in the government newspaper Izvestia. It appeared to signal an effort by the new Soviet leader, Mikhail S. Gorbachev, to invigorate the economy.
In his article Sunday, Mr. Agan-

Alluding to the rigid system of centralized planning, he said some organizations "try to make decisions for managers and their enter-prises, leaving them very little room for showing their own initiative."

What is required, he said, is the introduction of management courses that would employ such Western techniques as computermodeled games. Finding le Mot Juste for Spirited Talk About Wine: [1418]

By Frank J. Prial New York Times Service

Pare ever convinced that, unlike their wine, their language is in a state of decline. They blame this on the insidious influence of American culture - to which they are hopelessly addicted. Enraged by this paradox, they revile Americans and brand. U.S. culture banal. They mount campaigns against words such as "ferryboat" and "weekend" and indignantly call on the authorities to uproot signs that say "stop" at busy intersections.

To counteract this linguistic slide into the abyss, they write a lot about the true French language. For example, books in a series called "French Rediscovered" have been appearing intermittently for several years. The most recent title is "The Words of Wine and Drink-ing," by Martine Chatelain-Courtois. Appearing as it does in a series on saving the French language, the books shows, if nothing else, how important wine and spirits are to the French soul, not to mention its

'Natural' Drink Trend Aids British Cider

By R. W. Apple Jr. HEREFORD, England — The quest for lighter, more "natural" and healthful-seeming beverages so popular in the United States is also bubbling up in the deeply established drinking habits of the British. The movement is particularly effervescent at the world's largest cidermaking enterprise, H. P. Bulmer Ltd., a 98-yearold company that has prospered mightily from the recent changes in Britons' drinking habits.

Its facilities look like a set for a Hitchcock thriller - row after row of immense black-and-white oak vats towering 30 feet (9 meters) above the floor, jammed so closely together that the visitor soon loses his way in the maze. From its base in Hereford, close to the border between England and Wales, Bulmer's last year sold half of the total British consumption of 67 million gallons of cider, worth about £430 million, twice as much as a decade ago.

The British, to be sure, still consame 25 pints of beer for every one of cider, but while cider is growing, beer is declining, especially the tra-ditional British tipple, the darkhued brew called bitter

No one is quite sure how to ex-plain the evolution of cider from a drink favored by West Country product. Heavy advertising certainly had something to do with it, and so did the introduction of cider on draft into more than $5,000

But G. A. Thomas, a Bulmer's spokesman, said he suspected that the most important influence had been the growing preference for drinks that are light and "natural." British eider (not to be confused with the alcohol-free American product) is simply fermented apple juice, without additives. It ranges from 3 to 8 percent alcohol, less than most wine

Cider used to be cheaper than beer, but no more. In 1976, Denis Healey, then Chancellor of the Exchequer, a man who knew a bursaw one, reintroduced a cider duty "macho market." successive increases have made the drink somewhat more costly than draft bitter.

It was William the Conqueror who brought cider, along with so much else, to Britain. During the Hundred Years War it was a welcome substitute for the wine that no longer crossed the Channel, and in the 18th century it was a favorite of aristocrats. Then it fell from fashion, and cider houses by the dozens went into bankruptcy.

As in Normandy, British cider is made from all sorts of apples, but in the Hereford area it is made from sharp, tangy little fruits with names like Yarlington Mill and Tom Putt and Stoke Red. The apples are shaken from the trees and picked up from the ground by machines, ground into pulp and pressed. The juice ferments for about six to eight weeks.

Cider comes in many forms: strong and not-so-strong, still and bubbly, dry and sweet. The big sell-success in Australia, Kenya, even Mauritius — but has had no luck with the vast U.S. market, Imports account for most of the commercially available alcoholic cider in the United States, but they amounted to only 319,600 gallons last year. That includes the 20,000 cases of Bulmer's that ended up mainly in Boston and San Francis-

The problem, said Richard Thorne of Bulmer's, is that "Americans think of cider as something traditional and nonalcoholic to drink at Halloween and Thanksgivup. Taking notice of the popularity ing." But the company is not giving wine "coolers" in the States, Thorne is trying to promote the notion of apple coolers.

Perhaps the British producer ought to take into account the American health craze and quote the 17th-century diarist John Evelyn in its advertisements. Cider, he wrote, "excites and cleanses the stomach, strengthens the digestion er is Bulmer's Strongbow, an as-uringent drink with a fragrant taste, bladder from breeding the gravel BERGEN, Norway — Six love letters from the composer Edvard Grieg to a young concert pia-nist have been published here after a dispute that eventually split along political lines.

The letters were written by Grieg in 1896, when he was 52 years old and had been married for almost 20 years to the singer Nina Hagerup, his cousin. The recipient was Bella Edwards, a little-known musician believed to have been American or Danish. She was 17 or 18 at the time. Historians in Bergen, where Grieg was born in 1843, said he was well-known as having an eye for pretty women, but the letters to Edwards are the first indication that he carried on such relationships after middle age.

Grieg's career was at its peak when he wrote the letters, published by a library in Bergen. He is remembered primarily for the Peer Gynt suites - incidental music written for Henrik Ibsen's play and his romantic piano concerto.

The library bought the letters from a Danish antique collector in 1960. Grieg's descendants objected to their publication, citing the com-poser's statement in his will that he letters should be burned. But a majority of members of the board of the Bergen library voted in favor of publishing.

The dispute ended earlier this month when the main Norwegian political parties represented on the board voted in favor of the letters' publication, with the Christian Peoples Party opposing it.

"How I long for you and how happy you make me. It is as though every breath I take brings your soul closer to mine," Grieg wrote.

He is thought to have met Edwards in Copenhagen, where she studied from 1894 to 1896. He often traveled through the Danish capital on his way to concert dates on the Continent many commentators as boring. A week after its unveiling it still does not look like a dramatic contribution toward better economic health in a country dogged by severe unemployment, a shaky currency and a long history of bad labor relations.

Nigel Lawson, the chancellor of the Exchequer, does not aim at any sort of Keynesian reflation. Extrapolating from his own estimates, it is hard to see unemployment falling this year from the present three to four million, or around 13 percent of the labor force. The aim is to reduce the budget deficit, instead of pushing it up in Reaganite fashion to create more demand and jobs. That is not surprising, since Mr. Lawson is profoundly un-Keynesian and highly suspicious of the adventurous course that the Reagan administration has taken. The suspicion is warranted - not because the underlying concept of changing your budget balance to balance your economy is wrong, but because the Reagan administration seems to have dangerously overprescribed a medicine that should be used judiciously.

There were some mildly useful points in the Lawson budget. Reform of National Insurance - which taxes employers according to the number of workers they employ, and taxes workers according to their wages - may faintly encourage employers to take on more lower-paid workers; one hopes it will not inspire them to get rid of the higherpaid. The intention to draw the teeth of the official wage councils — which discourage recruitment of the jobless by keeping the bottom end of wages up — and the plan to increase spending on youth training projects

Britain's latest budget was dismissed by accord well with the sensible view that European governments have to deploy a wide range of policies to get people back to work.

What is disappointing is that Britain has not seen fit to follow up last year's rationalization of corporate tax by an attack on the irrationalities in the personal tax system. There are only promises of discussion papers, which can drag proceedings out be-youd the lifetime of the present government. As in America, the distortions in the present tax system are harmful to prosperity.

For the rest, Britain's budget is rather small beer - almost literally. Some questionably large increases in taxes on ciga-rettes and drink will raise the general price level slightly faster than would otherwise have been the case, mildly aggrieving the modest smokers and drinkers but doing little to help the drunkards and the cancer-prone. Mr. Lawson's second budget is intent on defeating inflation. Otherwise it is a bit of a nonevent. This is probably right for the moment, because a new event is about the last thing you need when your economy is emerging, a little groggy, from a yearlong coal strike, confusion in the market for oil (one of Britain's major assets) and upsetting conditions in the exchange markets.

A major problem has long been the idea that the British budget, which has to coincide with the vernal equinox, should set the scene for the year ahead. Decisions should not be made at an arbitrary date. Britain was probably right not to change much this Easter. What Mr. Lawson has to watch is whether, perhaps near the autumn equinox, some small change of course is needed.

Midterm Blues in Europe

All three of Western Europe's major governments have fallen into one kind or another of a midterm shump. Americans might usefully keep that in mind, since it is affecting the way Europe responds to the rest of the world.

French regional elections have turned out badly for the governing Socialists and well for their conservative opponents. Since the campaign for next year's parliamentary elections is already under way, the regional returns are another warning of trouble ahead for Presi-dent François Mitterrand: His own term runs until 1988, opening the possibility that he may find himself trying to govern with the National Assembly in the hands of the opposition. That is a familiar circumstance in American politics but has never happened in France's Fifth Republic, and the prospect creates great anxiety.

In West Germany earlier this month, Oskar Lafontaine, a radical Social Democrat, led his party to triumph in a state election in Saar-land. That has no immediate effect on the conservative-to-center coalition in power at the federal level, but Mr. Lafontaine's victory gives new force to the neutralist attack on established West German policy and significantly increases the strength of the left wing within the Social Democratic Party.

In Britain, Margaret Thatcher's Conservative government remains securely in control with its large parliamentary majority, but it has been sinking recently in opinion polls. If Britain, West Germany and Italy will hold elections in 1987. Governing parties in those three countries, unlike the French Socialists, are not yet close enough to the next vote to have to worry about it very urgently, but all of them are now halfway through their terms, with less to show than they had hoped.

The general tendency in European politics is neither to the right nor to the left but, as it has been for some years, against the party in power. The widespread sense of discontent is generated above all else by the very high un-employment and the failure of a succession of experiments and initiatives to restrain its steady rise. The interesting comparison between Britain and France suggests that the prescriptions of neither right nor left do much to cure the kind of unemployment from which most of Western Europe now suffers.

The causes lie deeper than conventional policy can reach. Most Europeans seem to be committed to social stability to a degree that is bad for economic growth. They know it, but they are sticking with their choice, however much they may complain about the side effects. The high unemployment has not led to political disruption or collapse, as politicians had feared, but it has made European politics a cheerless business in which governments now find themselves grimly on the defensive.

Botha Will Have to Negotiate

As still more South African blacks fell to police bullets over the weekend, President Botha told American television that it was all a Communist plot, that nobody in the world would stop him maintaining law and order and that people who opposed his government did not get shot. Meanwhile, white opposition members of Parliament from the Progressive Federal Party conducted a swift inquiry on the spot in the Uitenhage area of the Eastern Cape and came away convinced that the police had deliberately fired ball ammunition (as distinct from tear gas, plastic bullets or shot) into Thursday's funeral procession although they had not been attacked.

In less than seven months since the new constitution came into force, excluding the black majority but giving other non-white than 200 Africans have been killed by police in disturbances too numerous to count. The president's position is as clear today as it was a week, a month or a year ago; He will initiate reform, just you wait and see, but he will not tolerate the unrest which persistently proves it to be overdue. The real flaw in President Botha's approach is not so much the contradiction between the peacemaker and the paranoid policeman as his determination to impose reform from above rather than negotiate with those who demand it.

Cause for Concern in Greece

There is genuine cause for concern over developments in Greece. By forcing Constantine Caramanlis out, Andreas Papandreou has removed the chief obstacle to his campaign, launched in 1981, to get rid of U.S. military bases and perhaps quit NATO. It probably would be counterproductive for the United States to match Mr. Papandreou's provocations tit for tat. It would not be wrong to remind the Greek government of the mutual benefits to be derived from close cooperation.

ed de facto since 1926, when Marshal Józef Pilsudski introduced radical reforms which practically put an end to the democratic Con-

For an American Approach to Vietnam Australian officials have been in an out of Thai-By Robert A. Manning

WASHINGTON — Vietnam's brutal but ef-W fective military campaign against the Cambodian rebels fighting along the border with Thailand may have opened a window of opportunity for the United States and the ASEAN counries - a chance to settle the tragic conflict in Indochina and reduce Soviet influence there.

The Vietnamese offensive -- some 20 rebel camps have been destroyed in February and March - is part of a two-track strategy: to eliminate any serious resistance to the Vietnamese occupation of Cambodia, and then bargain from a position of strength to settle the conflict there on terms favorable to Hanoi.

Vietnam has in effect created a new set of political facts in Cambodia. At the same time, lowever, its own dire economic straits are compelling it to seek an opening to the West. How can the West be sure Hanoi wants to

How can the West be sure Hanor wants to negoriate? Consider events of recent months.

Even as Vietnamese troops were destroying the Cambodian rebel bases—those belonging to the non-Communist guerrillas and the Khmer Rouge—and driving some 300,000 refugees across the border into Thailand, Hanor agreed to cooperate with Washington on recovering Amercans still missing in action in Vietnam.

The supreme irony is that Vietnam is now advocating more American involvement in Southeast Asia. The Vietnamese clearly hope to curb Chinese influence. They also seem to see that Soviet economic aid has not been sufficient to sustain their country, and they fear the consequences of a Chinese-Soviet rapprochement.

What exactly has Vietnam gained? First, the Vietnam-backed government in Phnom Penh no longer faces any significant resistance inside Cambodia. Second, much to the chagrin of the ASEAN members, Vietnam has called China's bluff, Beijing, the main backer of the Khmer Rouge, has not launched any significant counteroffensive. Third, the refugees driven into Thailand put new pressure on it to reach a settlement. All three gains would be useful to Hanoi in negotiations over Cambodia. What would be the talks' likely outcome? The key question is whether Hanoi could accept a "Finlandized" Cambodia, over which it had less than complete control. The new Cambodian government would have to be the product of internationally supervised elections and would likely be headed, nominally at least, by Prince Norodom Sihanouk, former head of state and leader of one of the non-Communist rebel factions. It would, however,

also have to include some non-Communist rebels now fighting under Son Sann, the former prime minister, and even some Khmer Rouge, although not their infamous and barbaric leaders. There has already been a flurry of diplomatic activity. Senior American, Soviet, Chinese and land and Vietnam. Last month Prince Sihanouk appeared in Canberra urging international talks.

There is as yet little to suggest that Vietnam is willing to accept less than total domination of Indochina, But Hanoi's desire for Western aid and investment gives the United States significant leverage. So far the Reagan administration has deferred to China and the ASEAN countries on all questions involving the Cambodian con-flict. A bold American initiative could, however, do much to encourage Vietnamese flexibility.

What does America stand to gain? Eventual what does America stand to gain. Eventual normalization of relations, with a phasing down of the Soviet military presence at Cam Ranh Bay.

Many in the ASEAN countries would like to see Hanoi weaned from the Soviet bloc, Vietnam being after all the only likely counterweight to Chinese influence in Southeast Asia. This would be a serious blow to Moscow and could only enhance U.S. security interests in Asia. A settlement would also eliminate the possibility that the worst of the Khmer Rouge would eventually shoot their way back into power in Cambodia.

The United States would have nothing to lose from a diplomatic initiative. It would at the very least score points with ASEAN allies and call Vietnam's diplomatic bluff.

For American Military Aid to Khmer Nationalists

N EW YORK — Cambodia, the last country entrapped in the Indochina conflict and the one to suffer the most, can be rescued from its 15-year nightmare and restored to peaceful independence by Amer-ica working with the Pacific basin countries. The rescue operation requires that America find the political will to carry it out, and also that it provide military support to na-tionalist groups led by Prince Noro-dom Sihanouk and Son Sann.

A useful step was the vote last Wednesday by the House Foreign Affairs Committee's Subcommittee on Asia to allocate $5 million to the Sihanouk and Son Sam forces fighting the Vietnamese. A third resistance group, Pol Pot's Khmer Rouge, would not get a cent. U.S. military support for the nationalists, accompanied by diplo-macy, might well force the Soviet Union, China and Vietnam — all parties to Cambodia's tragedy — to move away from the stalemate. It would increase the cost of the Vietnamese occupation and ensure that if Hanoi's forces withdrew, the Cambodians would not be left to the mercy of the Khmer Rouge, who killed millions when they ruled. On moral grounds the nationalists deserve such support. Failure to act would amount to complicity in prolonging Cambodia's agony.

U.S. military support would not involve sending any military per-sonnel — only limited amounts of the materiel that guerrillas require. After America left Cambodia in 1975 there was almost continuous warfare between the Chinese-supported Khmer Rouge and the Soviet-supported Vietnamese forces. This led in January 1979 to the occupation of Cambodia. Hanoi pretended it invaded to rescue Cambodia from the Khmer Rouge, but in their place it installed ex-Khmer Rouge cadres — a cynical act best understood by imagining the allied armies installing ex-Nazis after freeing Enrope from Hitler. Cambodians have no love for the Vietnamese, their traditional rivals, nor for the Khmer Rouge. They cry out for an alternative. In recent years, encouraged by ASEAN — the Association of Southeast Asian Nations, which groups Brunei, Indonesia, Malaysia, the Philippines, Singapore and gradually emerged as a political force. In recognition of their growing effectiveness, Vietnam in recent months has brutally attacked and seized nationalist camps on the Thai-Cambodian border. The poorly supplied nationalists were defenseless against the overwhelmingly superior Soviet-supplied

Vietnamese tanks and artillery.
Without outside military support, including America's, the nationalists will remain defenseless. Thus ASEAN has asked the international community "to increase support and assistance to the Kampuchean people in their political and military struggle to liberate their homeland from foreign occupation" - an appeal primarily aimed at America.

Paradoxically, 10 years after expelling U.S. forces from Vietnam, Hanoi has invited the United States to return to Indochina and "assume a responsible role in contributing to the long-term peace and stability in Southeast Asia." This opportunity should not be missed.

Any settlement of the Cambodian conflict requires reduction of tensions between China and Viet-nam. America, with its close ties to China, can be an bonest broker.

Moreover, America could join Ja-pan in offering to assist Vietnam in its long-overdue economic develop-ment once its forces were withdrawn from Cambodia. In a Cambodian rescue effort, the United States would not work alone but would be complementing the efforts of ASEAN, China, Japan and other Pacific basin countries to find a solution.

How would America benefit? Resolution of the problem would remove the last major focal point of superpower conflict in the basin and enable China and Southeast Asian countries to accelerate economic development of the basin. This would bring immediate rewards to American trade and industry. In strategic terms, a Vietnam at peace would be under less pressure to offer bases to the Soviet Union.

Perhaps the greatest benefit of contributing to the successful accomplishment of peace in Indochina would be that it might finally help bury the painful memories of the Vietnam War.

'Greece First' Papandreou Provokes a Showdown

SAN DIEGO — With the resigna-tion of President Constantine Caramantis on March 10, inlighting turned to out-fighting in Greece. Prime Minister Andreas Papandreou precipitated the trouble by suddenly national repercussions. It takes 180 votes in the 300-member Parliament to elect a president on the third ballot, which is due on Wednesday after two inconclusive rounds. Mr. Papandreou's nominee — Christos Sarizetakis, a Supreme Court judge - is expected to win. Mr. Papandreou will then be the undisputed head of Greece until October, when his four-year term ends and new elections are mandatory.

If Mr. Sartzetakis fails to win the needed 180 votes, the acting president must dissolve Parliament and hold elections by May 6. Whether the next election is in May or October, it will be a no-holds-barred brawl. Mr. Papandreon has already called on his followers "to take up battle stations."

The chief opposition to his Pan-Hellenic Socialist Movement is the conservative New Democracy Party led by Constantine Mitsotakis, But his strongest opponent is Mr. Cara-manlis, 78, who has been prime minister and president for a total of 19 years. American officialdom and media have already taken sides. Mr. Caramanlis is touted as a "principled conservative" and Mr. Papandreou By L.S. Stavrianos stigmatized as being "slippery."

"anti-American" and "demagogic."
This is simplistic and misleading. In a 1979 exchange in Parliament, Mr. Papandreon, as an opposition

Greece, Mr. Caramanlis, as prime provisions "the facilities do not have nuclear weapons, nor may they be used for war operations without permission of the Greek government." It was later reported that in secret agreements the government had not only accepted the stationing of nuclear weapons but agreed to "exclusive U.S. activity" at the Heraklion base, where "there will be no Greek authority, supervision, or presence."

This episode not only renders suspect the conventional appraisal of the two Greek leaders, but also suggests an explanation for the widespread anti-American sentiment revealed by polls recently conducted in Greece. Ever since their country became independent in 1830, Greek political leaders have been doing what Mr. Caramanlis did in 1979. The reason was plain and naked force. Sir Edmund Lyons, the British minister to Athens, said in 1841: "A truly independent Greece is an absurdity. Greece can be either English or Russian, and since she must not be Russian, it is necessary that she be English." Science Resists the Disease of Secrecy

WASHINGTON — It is an old story that Russian scientists are hobbled by their country's historic mania for secrecy, while scientists in America thrive on free-flowing information. The new story is that each of the national scientific enterprises may be adopting some of the other's characteristics, to Soviet benefit and American loss.

Contrary to the impressions cre-ated by some overheated news accounts, the disease of secrecy has not deeply penetrated American science. The doors of the great majority of academic laboratories are literally open, as they always have been. The same is true of scientific meetings, and the results of research continue to be published in easily accessible journals. But in a fashion akin to early scattered outbreaks of an oncoming flu epidemic, the disease of secrecy has caught on here and there in the American science establishment.

In recent years there have been at least a score of publicized episodes involving the exclusion of foreign scientists from previously open, unclassified scientific meetings. In some cases the biame could be pinned on government agents who intimidated the meeting's organizers into barring noncitizens on the grounds that the subject matter, al-though not secret, was nonetheless "sensitive." In other cases, includBy Daniel Greenberg ing several reported in the latest issue of the Bulletin of the Atomic Scientists, foreigners were barred apparently to preclude difficulties with government authorities. Knowing how science works, the Pentagon's science managers have a reasonably good record against secrecy in fundamental research. The same cannot be said of the nonscientist policymakers, who chau-vinistically believe that U.S. science is so far ahead of the rest of the world that it can afford to pick and choose what it will share. The result has been a patchwork of policies that has arbitrarily blocked visits by some foreign scientists while admitting others.

context of thousands of scientific

Some universities have been outraged by requests to monitor the movements of Chinese and Sovietbloc students. At the insistence of the Pentagon, scientific papers have been yanked from some meetings. It must be stressed that, in the meetings and scores of thousands of scientific papers every year, these security episodes are rare. But the chilling effect warrants attention. Science is expensive, financially hard-pressed and dependent on government goodwill. In several in-stances where foreigners have been nizers' motive appears to have been to avoid trouble, rather than responsiveness to government edicts. Meanwhile, the Soviets are aware of the scientific price they pay for secrecy so obsessive that res ers in adjacent institutes are deliberately kept in ignorance of each other's work. Ideology and national tradition make it difficult for enlightened Soviet research administrators to crack that suffocation mold. But they are trying.

While East-West science ex-

changes flourished under détente, the Soviets demonstrated a keen interest in the managerial techniques of American science. And just recently the Soviets opened some of their major computerized data bases to a Vienna-based think tank, the International Institute for Applied Systems Analysis, which is co-managed by American and Soviet researchers. The political dynamics of that decision are unknown, but it is a major turnabout from the usual Soviet way of doing business.

The current reality is that American science remains largely open while Soviet science remains largely closed. It is the respective trends that should get attention.

Reagan Asserts Money Reform Not a Priority

Washington Post Service
WASHINGTON — President Ronald Reagan said Monday that the rest of the world's currencies would gain against the dollar "as they improve their economies" and that a new review of the interna-tional monetary system therefore is not a top priority on his agenda. Mr. Reagan's remarks at a White House breakfast with a group of Washington correspondents was at odds with a statement last week by his Treasury Secretary, James A. Baker 3d, Mr. Baker expressed interest in examining ways to revamp world currency markets but without tightening controls on them.

In a related development, a Treasury report to Congress on Monday warned that a return to a system of managed currency-exchange rates could impair the ability of the United States and other major nations to pursue strong economic growth with low inflation.

Mr. Reagan acknowledged that some reduction in the dollar's strength against other currencies "could be beneficial to all of us, because our country has the ability to export exonomic trouble as well as economic recovery."

But he suggested that greater stability will be achieved without an international monetary reform ef-

For example, Willy de Clerq, ex-ternal affairs commissioner of the European Community, suggested in Washington last week that world leaders consider broadening the European Monetary System, which limits the permissible fluctuations among Europe's currencies, to the dollar and other currencies.

Northwestern University in Evanston, Illinois, says that in some years, the figures have been so mis-leading that the red ink may actually have been black and in others, like the present, even redder than the government says it is. Bad calculations, Mr. Eisner says, can lead to bad policies, such as those he blames for the severity of the recession in 1981 and 1982. The work of Mr. Eisner and an assistant professor at the University of Illinois in Chicago, Paul J.

Pieper, has raised interest among economists and public officials here following publication of an article they wrote for the current issue of a conservative quarterly, The Public Interest. Mr. Eisner, who is 63, calls him-

Roosevelt and leavened with the ideas of Senator Gary Hart, the Colorado Democrat whose presidential candidacy he supported last year. Mr. Bisner's findings, however, have impressed economists on the right as well as the left.

"That article made me step back and have a little less certainty that deficits are going to lead to the economic effects I thought, at least in the short term," said Norman J. Omstein, economist at the conservative American Enterprise Institute, a research organization here.

Mr. Fisner and Mr. Pieper began their examination of the federal accounts by incorporating the govcrument's assets. According to Mr. Jensen, financing for the bond market is also a concern, with most traders waiting on the sidelines and "somewhat apprehensive" about interest rates. "The market will often flounder and retest its lows after a rally," Mr. Jensen said.

California, also said the market's slide was a result of the IBM announcement. "When a major company reports disappointing earnings, it's certainly going to affect — on a near-term basis — the market as a whole," he said.

Among factors that may affect the stock market this week is heavy government financ-ing. On the other hand, stocks could get a boost if President Ronald Reagan and Congress are able to compromise on reductions in defense

A Blue Chip Performance

 EARNINGS RISE 55% DIVIDEND UP TO DM 9 PER SHARE

In 1984, the VEBA Group's profitoriented program of streamlining and restructuring its activities again produced excellent results. Overall the year's net profit rose by 55% to DM 575 million on total sales of DM 50 billion, enabling the company to increase the dividend by 20% and to further strengthen the reserves.

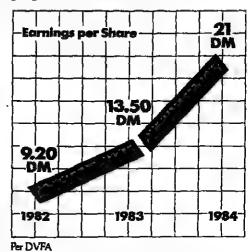

Moreover, each of the Group's main sectors turned in higher profits. These sectors are electricity generating and supply, chemicals, petroleum and petroleum products, trading and transportation.

Electricity - Profits in this key sector grew significantly thanks principally to high capacity utilization in the field of nuclear power generation.

Chemicals – In recent years, VEBA has restructured this sector considerably, concentrating on specialized production with high profit potential and introducing new research programs.

Petroleum - VEBA continued to expand its exploration and production of oil and gas, and higher profits reflect the shift from processing activities to production.

Trading and Transportation -Traditionally profitable, this sector again performed well, strengthening its integrated service capabilities and tapping new markets around the world.

Outlook – As a result of considerable restructuring measures - even in difficult years - VEBA has evolved into a genuine blue chip company. With each major component showing profits, the outlook for the broadly based VEBA Group is indeed promising.

To find out more about VEBA, its operations and performance, please get in touch with VEBA AG, Karl-Arnold-Platz 3, D-4000 Düsseldorf 30, Federal Republic of Germany.

But both the shipping and property operations continued to suffer from a depressed market, despite a recent upturn in the local residential property market after a slump of three years.

Swire Properties Ltd.'s net profit for 1984 was below earlier expectations, Mr. Miles said, explaining The property pickup came a little bit late for us this year, but our aviation, industrial and trading op-erations picked up the quite small differential there."

Mr. Miles also mentioned Cathay Pacific's exposure to currency fluctuations and the effect on revenues of the strong U.S. dollar, to which the Hong Kong dollar has been linked since October 1983 through an arbitrage package with note-issuing banks.

He said the strengthening of the

Hong Kong dollar was "less help-ful" as the year progressed, when matched against their key earning currencies, the yen, the Australian dollar, the Dentsche mark and the British pound,

Mr. Miles also mentioned the company's hopes of becoming more involved in China's offshore oil-exploration program.

"At the moment, Chinese authorities tend to say that the offshore oil development will be handled by Chinese interests, but my impression now is that Hong Kong is more and more included in those

Suzuki Discusses U.K. Production

TOKYO - Suzuki Motor Co. z discussing joint production of commercial vehicles designed by Suzuki in Britain with Bedford Commercial Vehicles a British division of General Motors Corp., a Suzuki spokes-man said Monday.

An Japanese newspaper, Nippon Kogyo Shimbun, re-ported that Suzuki would sign a production agreement in June or July with the aim of starting assembly early in 1986 and making 10,000 vehicles in the first year.

Suzuki said it and Land Rover Santana SA started production in Spain this month of off-road vehicles with 1,000-cnbio-centimeter (61-cubic-inch) engines. In Detroit, Automotive News reported that GM and Suzuki were discussing a jointproduction venture in Canada with annual capacity of 170,000

Bayerische Vereinsbank Says Profit Rose 6% in 1984

MUNICH - Bayerische Vereinsbank AG's group net profit rose 6 percent in 1984 to 185.97 million Deutsche marks ($57.93 million) from 175.40 million DM in 1983, Maximilian Hackl, chairman of the management board, said Monday.

The dividend was unchanged at 11 DM per share, he said.
The parent bank's 1984 partial operating profit, which excludes earnings from trading on its own account,-declined 4.3 percent over 1983 to 531.7 million DM.

Mr. Hacki said Bayerische expects its interest margin to drop under pressure this year, but is optimistic that an increase in business volume will offset the decline.

The average interest margin on business in the first two months of an average of 2.75 percent through- 1983 volume of 502.51 million DM, out 1984, he said. In 1983, the average margin was 3 percent.

Mr. Hackl said 1984's earnings were totally satisfactory even though at the operating level 1983 results could not be quite matched. However, bank officials said profits picked up strongly in the second half of 1984. At mid-year, the partial operating profit was 15 percent below the mid-1983 level because of slack credit demand. Mr. Hackl said Bayerische Vereinsbank still was making large risk provisions.

While domestic credit risks show signs of declining, there seems no solution to the international debt problem and provisions in this secfor were increased during 1984 "by a not inconsiderable amount," he said. He did not elaborate.

However, overall, the group made published risk provisions of 1985 declined to 2.68 percent from 416.44 million DM, down on the ernment revenue, they said.

Anglo American Industrial Corp., the South African mining group, said it expects 1985 earnings to be comparable to those in 1984, if the economy does not deteriorate significantly. The company posted a pretax profit of 322 million rand ($169.5 million) in 1984.

States, Mr. Nogawa and industry analysts here said, would enable Komatsu to lessen its dependence on depressed construction-machinery markets such as the Middle East, cement the loyalties of its U.S. dealers, avert future protec-tionism and shield itself against possible currency fluctuations by expanding its non-yen investments.

When Komatsu began aggressively trying to increase its exports in the 1970s, Mr. Moyer said, the company concentrated on the fastest growing overseas markets - the developing economies of the Mid-be making heavy construc-effort has been stalled by the inter-national debt crisis, the faltering national debt crisis, the faltering price of oil and the war between iran and Iraq. Mr. Nogawa said a 17-percent decline in export sales in 1984 contributed to Komatsu's 22.6-percent drop in net income, to $94 million. To help combat that slide, Komatsu has pursued the United States market much more actively in the last few years, banking on the expiration of a technical agreement that limited its exports to bulldozers until 1982. With Komatsu able to offer a wider range of construction products, it was able to persuade more of its 50 dealers to sell only Komatsu-made items. Parts and ser-vice make up a large part of dealers' businesses, so dealers prefer manufacturers with a full line. Komatsu's U.S. sales more than doubled last year, to $300 million, from $130 million in 1983, and accounted for 10 percent of total sales, Mr. Nogawa said.

Komatsu now has about a 9percent market share of construction machinery in the United States, Mr. Nogawa said, and the company hopes to expand that share to 15 percent to 20 percent after it begins production in the United States.

Analysts predicted that Komat su's share would grow to about 30 percent, and he said that the companies most likely to be hurt by Komatsu's expansion would be ed did nothing. Komatsu small ones.

According to Duncan Campbell, Mitel's vice president for finance and its chief financial officer, the company was hit by the combined effects of the global recession, its own, too rapid, expansion and a year's delay in getting its SX-2000 digital switching system on the market. Its heavy position in its major markets — buyers of smaller telephone switching devices in the United States, Canada and Britain -meant that future growth would

Silver Prices Jump Sharply

(Continued from Page 9) the "dollar could have peaked recently," and he says he thinks that preceded the rise in the precious metal prices last week.

One unanswered question hanging over the silver market is the large holdings of the Hunt brothers, the Texans who tried to dominate the silver market in 1980 when the price rose to the dizzying height of more than $50 an ounce.

Recently, the Hunts have had financial problems with their cor-porate holdings. Analysts wonder whether the Hunts have been liquidating some of their store of silver.

Another drag on silver prices is that production exceeded demand worldwide by some 52 million ounces in 1984, according to Handy & Harman, the precious

"The strategy to go with a digital system was correct," Mr. Campbell said. But he added that Mitel was ill-equipped to take on a project of the size and complexity of the SX-2000. "It is a completely new ballgame to be managing a project of that magnitude."

The company recently has made some dramatic changes. It has cut inventories substantially, reduced its worldwide work force from a high of 6,400 in November, 1983, 10 about 5,000, put some employees on a four-day work week, sold a plant in South Burlington, Vermont, and divested itself of a plant in Shannon, Ireland. Mr. Campbell expressed "cantions optimism" about Mitel's future. "We're going in the right direction and we're starting to gather momentum," he said. But many analysts are not quite so enthusiastic.

According to some analysts, the changes at Mitel seem to be having the had made "a number of positive tell had made "a number of positive changes" during the past few years, "essentially the jury is still out" about whether the company will regain its financial health.

Murray Grossner, an analys with Richardson Greenshields of Canada Ltd. in Toronto, agreed that Mitel was "on the road to improvement," but predicted that "recovery will take an extended peried of time."

"I think that Mitel was out of control for a few years," he said. "In a sense, they dug their own

Reviewed by Christopher Schemering JULIUS LESTER'S "Do Lord Remember J Me," a novel about a black evangelist and his family from slavery to present-day Mississippi, has the hypnotizing weariness of an old voice but the touching piquancy of a child learning its first words. It is a naggingly familiar tale — a minority struggling against social and economic adversity through the ages—but Lester writes with such a poetic ease, evoking a strong emotional response in the evoking a strong emotional response in the reader, that the situations seem distinctively

In the opening pages, the Reverend Joshua Smith, in ill health, is composing his obituary, wracking his brain for details, as if the memories flooding forth would validate all that came before. "Dying wasn't nothing but going back to the beginning." he muses, adjusting himself to the sensuous tugs of memory, repeating anecdotes about his ancestors to himself as if they were mantras.

Joshua remembers as a child hearing his father tell about his great-grandfather, Trem-ble Smith, a house slave, who informed on other slaves planning an uprising and won his freedom—a startling bit of information, morally horrendous on the surface, which surprisingly produced a swell of pride in Joshua's father. (By informing Tremble saved the innocent slaves from indiscriminate lynching and also blockmeiled the slaveowner into giving also blackmailed the slaveowner into giving Tremble and his family land and freedom. Joshua's father was a stumbling down drunk every day of the week except when he awoke on Sunday to take the pulpit and dazzle the community with his hellfire and brimstone preaching. When Joshua asked his father why he would often laugh aloud in the middle of a sermon, his father said. "Son, it seems like sometimes I get so filled with loving God. I just got to langh" got to laugh."

That Joshua had inherited his father's propensity for the unexpected became apparent when Joshua interrupted his own sermons years later by bursting into spirituals that some church members hadn't heard in 50 years. Called the "Colored Billy Graham" by the newspapers, he was known as the "Singing Evangelist" all around the country. Although a phenomenant as a strengther peacetar he never the page of the country. phenomenon as a traveling preacher, he never kept his own parish for long, despite his personal popularity, since he married a light-skinned woman who was discriminated against by other blacks wherever they settled.

"Do Lord Remember Me" is woven almost entirely of this prickly, ironic kind of narrative twist. Painful memories and incidents are dredged up without judgment being made on them, and the emotion and anxiety that surround them are sometimes left unresolved. Similarly, despite the mistreatment of blacks Similarly, despite the mistreatment of blacks through the ages — slave children eating out of pig troughs, lynchings, police beatings during the civil rights movement — the narrator's emotions and pent-up rage are effectively held in check by the matter-of-fact storytelling.

Other times, as happens in real life, familial slights (and imagined slights) come to a head 20, and, in some cases, 50 years later; the resentments, misunderstandings, and guilt explode in naroxysms of emotion. Joshua's care-

Remembering a separate incident, Joshua, feeling a flood of shame overtaking him, asks his wife Carlotta, "Did you ever forgive me?" Although they hadn't spoken for five decades about the time when the proud husband slapped her for taking a domestic job with a white family, Carlotta knows exactly what he's talking about and responds dryly, "I stayed,

Part of the reason the novel is so affecting i that the cast of characters is not composed of the saintly ghosts that haunt other such tales but, rather, people so flawed and so adept at the art of familial intrigue that the reader can't help caring about all of them. The delayed confrontations, the unresolved emotions, the seemingly irrational loyalties are home truths. that juxtaposed with forces out of the charac-ters' control — the racial hatred, social violence, and subtle discrimination that push family members to positions of humiliation and compromise -- combine for a quietly dignified novel that has a knockout emotional punch.

BLOOMINGTON, Indiana - Steve Alford scored 29 points, including II in two overtime periods here Sunday night, lifting Indiana to a 94-82 victory over Marquette in a quarterfinal game of the National Invitation Tournament

Also advancing was Louisville, a 71-66 home-court victor over Tennes-see-Chattanooga. In Wednesday's semifinals in New York, Louisville will take on UCLA and Indiana will meet Tennessee.

A three-point play by Alford with 3:30 left in the second overtime gave Indiana an 81-76 lead and Marquette, in deep foul trouble, got no closer than three points thereafter. The Hooisers forced the first overtime when Kreigh Smith tied the score at 68 on two free throws with 22 seconds left

The winners' Uwe Blab sunk a free throw 20 seconds from the end of the first oversime to knot the score at 76 and set up the deciding extra period. Tom Copa led Marquette (20-11) with 17 points. Mark McSwain and Jeff Hall scored 15 points each as Louisville held off 24-8 Temessee-Chattanooga, Behind a strong fast break and dominant boardwork, Louisville shot a blistering 71 percent and cruised to a 35-24 halftime lead. The visitors moved to within 52-48 on a 15-foot jumper by Gerald Wilkins with 7:58 left to play, but the closest they got after that was 65-62 on a basket by Clifford Morgan with 1:11 remaining. Wilkins had a game-high 22 points.

The Brothers Grimm

Once Upon a Time There Were 2 German Linguists Who Thought

They Would Go Down in History for Their Dictionary

By Tyler Marshall

Los Angeles Times Service KASSEL, West Germany — Once upon a time, there were two brothers who enjoyed collecting fairy tales. Although they were great linguists and opened new frontiers in the study of languages, they would be re-membered most for a collection of stories that enchanted children the world over.

Unlike the stories that made them famous, the tale of Jacob and Wilhelm Grimm is true. This year, the region of central Germany where they recorded such tales as "Snow White," "Sleeping Beauty" and "Little Red Riding Hood" has begun celebrating the brothers' 200th birthdays.

The tales have stirred controversy virtually from their beginnings. Renaissance Europe viewed the pre-Grimm versions as useless superstition. After World War II, the Grimms' tales were banned for almost two years in the British zone of occupied Germany because of a belief that their sometimes gruesome con-tents had helped pave the way for the German people to accept Nazi atrocities.

The tales were attacked as reactionary by Europe's New Left in the 1960s, and a generation of American parents worried that they were too violent.

But those reservations have done little to blunt the widespread popularity of the tales. They have been translated into 70 languages, with each culture hav-ing its favorites.

According to Heinz Rölleke, a Wuppertal University professor and a respected authority on German folklore, Japanese children love the fantasy in the stories. Soviet versions invariably con-centrate on the coziness of tiny houses or little families, while Americans tend to accentuate the glamour, "Americans like the powerful king, the large weddings or the big castles," Rolleke said.

pared a special issue of stamps illustrating the stories, the biggest exhibitions cast the Grimms as key figures in Germany's cultural and political history. These exhibitions will emphasize the intellectual achievements and political commitments of the brothers' most productive years. This element, viewed by many Germans as far more important than the tales, remains largely unknown to the rest of the world.

"The Grimms are known too nuch as simple storytellers," said Klaus Becker, a historian and the spokesman for a major exhibit planued this summer at the Brothers Grimm Museum in Kassel. "Our aim is to show more of their role as intellectuals who yearned for democracy and German unity during a period of French domination."

Three exhibitions, including one devoted to the illustrations drawn by a third Grimm brother, Ludwig, are planned for Kassel, where the brothers lived while gathering the tales. Symposiums on linguistics and German erymology are planned for West Ber-lin, Marburg and Kassel. The state of Hesse, where much of the Grimms' work took place, has budgeted 1.5 million Deutsche marks (about $470,000) to promote the celebrations. German cities in Hesse are anteing up an-lives was to begin a major dictio-nary that shed light on the development of the German language and set a standard internationally for linguistic histories. Wilhelm died in 1859 as work on the letter D was being completed. Jacob lived four years longer, reaching the letter F. But the project survived both world wars and Germany's division, fi-nally being completed in 1960. In the Cold War atmosphere of the 1950s, work on the Grimm dictionary was a rare point of official contact between Fast and West Germany. The two states now share the publishing rights. A commemorative paperback version published last fall in West Germany has gone into its second printing.

Jacob, born in Hansu Jan. 4.

1785, was the more ambitious of the two. In 1814 he joined the Hessian delegation to the Congress of Vienna, which determined the shape of post-Napole-onic Europe, but when the task proved as boring as it was weighty, Jacob amused himself by learning seven languages, in-cluding Serbian, Russian, Greek and Latin

It was Wilhelm's decision to soften the collection of tales with the cozy, once-upon-a-time beginnings and reassuring happily-ever-after endings that contributed to their enormous popularity.

Both brothers were politically active and, as professors at Gotungen University, were part of the "Gottingen Seven," a group of academics expelled from the Hanoverian kingdom in 1833 for protesting the monarch's decision to suspend the constitution.

It was a protest a more radical professor, named Friederich Engels, decided not to make. But both Engels and his colleague Karl Marx respected the Grimms' political commitment and their contributions to the German language. As a result, the tales have always enjoyed official sanction in the Soviet Union, and Moscow plans to publish special commemorative editions to mark the bicentennial. Historians such as Becker also hope to use the celebrations to erase some of the myths that have grown up around the tales, such as the image of the Grimms trav-eling through the countryside recording peasant stories.

"Most of the stories were related by middle-class friends or came via servants or tradesmen around the Grimm home in Kassel," Becker said.

Rölleke said 90 percent of the tales were contributed by women, including Wilhelm's wife, Dort-chen. "Old Maria," a black-smith's daughter who was the widow of a Hessian mercenary killed in the American Revolu-tion, related "Little Red Riding Hood," "Sleeping Beauty" and
"The Valiant Little Tailor." 'Cinderella" came from a middle-class family in neighboring Westphalia. The most prolific contributor was Dorothea Viehmann, who delivered 37 mainly lesser-known stories to the Grimm home in addition to fresh

Although the Grimms assembled the tales while in their 20s, their interest in folklore persisted through their lives. More than 1,000 unpublished legends, myths and portions of other fairy tales gathered by the Grimms are stored in the West Berlin Staatsarchiv (State Libary). Although most of the material is said to be fragmentary and of no great value, the bicentennial celebrations could awaken new interest in it.
